

We are delighted to have 17 volunteers who have made a commitment to come into school to listen to readers on a regular basis. They have received training from Mrs Blacksell and most have now started listening to readers each week. This gives the children an opportunity to develop their reading fluency and deepen their understanding of what they have read. The more children read the better their reading skills become, which has a positive impact on their learning across the curriculum. We wish to thank all our reading volunteers and, if you were unable to volunteer, urge you to listen to your own children read on a regular basis.
